What is the best solar fire starter?

The Sundance Solar Fire Starter is a great value! Your alternative to using a tinder box style solar lighter is using a more traditional mirror styled solar spark lighter. Sundance Solar makes one of the best traditional style solar fire starters. The design is very simple.

What are the best Firestarter kits?

Zippo has been doing fire for a long time, so it's no surprise that the brand also makes one of the best firestarter kits out there. The Zippo Firestarter Kit ($22) is the whole package and has everything you need, up to laying down kindling. It even includes collapsible stainless steel fire bellows to urge the fire forward once it's going.

How do you use a fire starter?

The fire starter is very simple to use. There is a point or spring (tinder holder) that you load up with your tinder – obviously, pick something that will easily catch on fire.

Can you use a solar fire starter in an emergency?

Lighters can break, matches can get ruined, and so just having a solar powered fire starter in case of an emergency should provide you with some peace of mind. The other thing you can use a solar fire starter for is an emergency signal. The reflective surface makes it great for directing sunlight as an emergency signal, similar to using a mirror.

What is the best Firestarter for survival?

Bear Grylls teamed up with Gerber to make his idea of the best possible firestarter for survival. They came up with the Gerber Bear Grylls Survival Series Fire Starter, which is essentially the Gerber Fire Starter that we reviewed above, plus his initials.

How much does a firestarter cost?

A few firestarters on this list fall below the $15 mark. Our best budget option is the Light My Fire MayaStick-on-a-Rope ($4). Our best natural option, the UCO Stormproof Sweetfire Fire Starter Points ($6), is also affordable. Both are easy to use in most conditions and proved fairly reliable in our testing.
